AN OLD FASHIONED GIRL.

Old-fashioned? Yes, I must confess The antique pattern of her dress, The ancient frills and furbolows, The faded ribbons and the bows. That wrinkled neck, those tawny arms, I connot guess; her russett gown Round her spare form hangs loosely down; Her voice is thin and cracked; her eye And smile have lost their witchery. By those faint jests, that flagging wit, By each attenuated curl, She surely is, I must admit.

An odd old-fashioned girl. 'T is long, long since she had a beau, And now with those who sit a-row Along the wall she takes her place, With something of the old-time grace. She yearns: o join the mazy waltz, And slyly sniffs her smelling-saltz. Ah, many an angel in disguise May walk before our human eyes! Where'er the fever-smitten lie In grimy hannts of poverty. Along the dark and squalid street,

'Mid drunken jests of boor and churl, She goes with swift and pitying feet,— This same old-fashioned girl. -James B. Kenyon, in Century Bric-a-Brac.

TRAMPS!

Late Rackets Resorted to by These Pests of Modern Society.

Two ingenious tramps have been going the rounds lately. One of them on reaching a gate suddenly becomes lame. He can scarcely drag his crippled body to the door. So hungry. Can't work because he was terribly broken up in a late railroad accident while trying to save a train. He would be glad to get a pair of shoes, or a coat, or even a shirt if the flowed from the Greencastle water kind lady has one to spare. After getting all he can he hobbles out with groans and grimaces until he reaches his "pard" in the street. Then he tosses his bundle up, turns a hand-spring, puts his thumb on his nose towards the house, and the two sit down to examine the haul. After eating all they want, and appropriating what clothing they can, the "pard" hurries with the balance down to the "gang," who are camped by the railroad, and gets back by the time the poor cripple has "worked" another house.

The other tramp has a different racket. You hear the front-door bell ring. You suppose it is some caller. 1 You hurriedly slick up a little, take your apron off and throw it behind the door, pick up a lot of scattered things all in a flutter and then serenely open the door. It is a sad sight. A poor fellow who cannot open his eyes-had both of them blown out in a mine explosion in Pennsylvania-wants a little bite to eat. Anything, he is so hungry. Loves to work just dearly, but is too old to learn to do the work that blind people usually do. Accident happened only last year. It touches your heart. You give him all the spare vituals in the house. He thanks you but is suddenly taken with a terrible pain in the head; has them almost constantly. If he could only get enough money to pay his railroad fair to some city hospital. You give him all your loose change, sorry you haven't more-while he again thanks you and asks God's blessing upon you and yours. You are richly repaid, but as you close the door you wonder how he ever managed to find that little button to push the door bell! Strange you didn't think of that before. You watch him from the window. He walks straight around the path to the gate. Unfastens it readily, and turns down the street, with a know ing wink at his "pard," who is waitment by Deft., at Plff.'s costs, and ing at the corner. They shake each other upon their good looks, go to the nearest saloon, pay for a couple of drinks and lose the balance of your money at cards with the barkeeper. Now the poor fellow thinks that it is about time for his "pard" to go blind, so the other fellow works the same game on a neighbor of yours with about the same results.

St. Louis, Sept. 29.—It was a watery outlook that greeted the Grand Army boys when they got out bed of Wednesday morning. The rain was still falling and with the apparent intention of fighting it out on this line if it took till Christmas. But the boys in blue had come to St. Louis to parade-for one thing—and they wouldn't be denied. So at 10:30 about 20,000 of them divided into ten divisions were in line waiting for the starting gun, while the streets were thronged with onlookers and the stands erected on the route were full of people in spite of the prevailing wetness. The gun boomed, and as its echoes died away, as if the clerk of the weather had denied it as a signal, too, the floodgates were opened, and as the veterans took up their march they walked in a perfect flood of rain. But they had met worse showers than this, and with a cheer that flew down the line they plunged forward, Gens. Fairchild and Grier in the lead, and had their parade. They were a motley throng. It is no use to talk of a brill-iant pageant. There was nothing brilliant about it. The marchers were covered with every conceivable wrap that wouled help to shed the water, and the flags and banners hung limp from their staffs. Nothing, however, could repress the entumultuous grew the cheers, which were taken up by the throngs on the sidewalks and stands and echoed and re-echoed all along the line. Gen. Fairchild, Gen. Sherman, and the distinguished visitors left the line at the reviewing-stand and stood there in the rain watching the boys pass and bowing to the cheers given them for eighty-four minutes, which was the time occupied in passing. Just day was clear and pleasant. At 4 o'clock the encampment met and Gen. Fairchild made his annual address, which was interrupted frequently by loud applause He warned the delegates not to permit politics to enter the debates of the encampmet, and congratulated them that heretofore they had kept the disorganizing influence out. He expressed his disappointment at the defeat of the pension bill in the last congress, and said a bill had been prepared and adopted by nine-tenths of the members, which, he had no doubt, would pass the next congress. A service pension bill, he said, was urged by many, but he advised the delegates to take what they could get and leave better things for the future. Regarding the rebel flag episode he said the soldiers and loyal people, north and south, did not want a reopening of the chasm that had yawned twenty five years ago, and would do nothing to reopen it, but would into increasing any attention. but would join in opposing any attempt to elevate symbols of disunion to special honor, and do anything possible to exalt all that pertains to loyalty to the Union, to the end that the people may revere the symbols of Union, and never couple them with those of sentiments antagouistic thereto.

The annual report showed that there were 372,674 members of the Grand Army; that $250,000 had been expended for relief, and 400 comrades had died during the year. St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 30.-The G. A. P. encampment Thursday transacted a large amount of business. The report of the committee on pensions was adopted. It advocates the new pension bill which gives a pension of $12 per month to veterans who are now or who may hereafter become dependent; a continuance of pensions to wid-ows in their own right; an increase in the pensions to minor children, and pensions to parents to date from date of dependence. The report stated that the new bill would take 12,000 veterans out of poor-houses. The bill is stated as far short of what should be granted, though it contains a recognition of the principle that pensions may be granted without absolute proof of disability the result of service. A mill censure of the veto of the report, where i is stated that the veto was referred to the G. A. R. posts for an expression of opinion, which came back almost unanimous that the veto ignored the promises of the antior, a remembrance of the soldiers' sacrific s and a grateful recognition of their services. The following measures are recommended to be urged upon congress:

St. Louis, Oct. 1.-The last session of the G. A. R. encampment was held Friday. The principal feature of the morning was a lively debate over Vandervoort's resolution censur-ing the president for vetoing the dependent pension bill. The resolutions were reported adversely, but Vanderyoort insisted that they ought to be adopted. He was answered by Gen. Grosvenor, of Ohio, and a vote resulted in an overwhelming defeat for the resolutions, Election of officers was then proceeded with, and Judge Ray, of Minneapolis, was elected commander-in-chief on the first ballot, Slocum receiving 153 votes. Rae made a short address of thanks, and then the other' officers were elected as follows: Senfor vice commander, Nelson Cole, of Missouri; junior vice commander, J. C. Line-han, of New Hampshire; sergeant general, Lawrence Donahue, and chaplain-in-chief Rev. Edward Anderson. It was resolved to erect an equestrian statue of Gen. Logan at Washington City, to which Governor Alger, and Gen. Lennon, of New York, each sub-scribed $1,000. The officers were installed, and the annual encampment adjourned sine

The notables of the encampment attended a banquet at the Lindell hotel at night. Among those present were Gen. Sherman, Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, Gen. John M. Palmer, Gen. Slocum, and ex-Governor Curtin. The rank and file held a camp-fire at Schneider's garden, and by morning the veterans, their wives, and children were dispersing to their homes or getting ready to disperse.

The boiler in the engine room of the George P. Plant Milling company's flour-mill at St. Louis exploded Monday, killing four men and a woman and dangerously wounding the engineer and a little girl. Pieces of the flying boiler wrecked a two-story dwelling and a livery stable.

Part of the roof of the Bast colliery at Ashland, Pa., gave way on Saturday, forcing poisonous gas into a cutting where twenty men were at work. Five of the men were killed and a number dangerously injured.

PRESIDENT AND WIFE RECEIVED IN INDIANA WITH ACCLAIM.

An Enthusiastic Time at Indianapolis and Terre Haute-A Visit to Mrs. Hendricks -St. Louis Reached in a Blaze of Glory and a Roar of Applause-The City Brilliantly Illuminated-A Quiet Sunday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 1.-President Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland began their tour of the west and south Friday. Their departure from Washington was under a bright sky and pleasant auspices. The special train bearing the small and select party left the Baltimore & Potomac depot promptly at 10 o'clock Friday morning.
St. Louis, Oct. 3.—After a trip, the route of which was lined with enthusiastic and cheering citizens, the president and his wife arrived at this city Saturday night at 11:45. All the way from the national capital the stations and towns passed by the train were alive with people who wanted to get a glimpse of the distinguished party or a shake of the president's hand. In only a few in stances were stops made, one of which was at Pittsburg for seven minutes, where there was an immense throng and thescheering was thremendous. Ohio was crossed at night and no stop was made in the trip until Indianapolis was reached. Here there was a procession to the capitol, where the governor welcomed the president to the state and the president briefly answered. The streets were rivers of humanity, and it wasn't still life either, and Mrs Cleveland was the beroine of the occasion and distributed her smiles and gracious bows lavishly. A visit was paid to Mrs. Hendricks.

At Terre Haute another stop was made, and there was a procession to the State Nor-mal school through streets densely massed with people, who cheered the president and wife to the echo. Here Senator Voorhees introduced the president, and Col. "Dick" Thompson delivered the welcoming address, to which the president replied. Once more aboard the special train, to which the way was all but blocked by the crowds who want ed to greet the party, and the route was taken up for St. Louis. There were few incidents of the trip that would not be repetition-every station crowded as the train sped by, a loud cheer, dying away in the rear as the travelers were gone, the president and Mrs. Cleveland on the rear platform bowing their acknowledgements-that was the scene

At St. Louis the town was ablaze. The streets were illuminated with various colored lights, while the air was full of the flash of fireworks, and half the city was at the station. It required a charge of mounted police to make a road, and the carriage containing the president and his wife was driven rapidly to the residence of Mayor Francis, followed by the throng on a run, cheering while breath lasted. Sunday was passed quietly, the visitors going to church in the morning and a short ride in the afternoon. On Monday the weather was as near per-fect as could have been desired. A clear sky and clean streets-washed by a brisk shower during Sunday night-met the view of the St. Louisan when he got out of his couch, and it stayed that way all day. The president and wife first visited -- at 11 a.m. -- the fair, where they were welcomed by a multitude of people-woman and children mostly, for it was children's day at the fair. After driving around the grounds, and listening to a patriotic song by 3,000 school children, the visitors were driven back to the city. Mrs. Cleveland was left at Mayor Francis' residence, from whence she was afterward driven to Mrs. Scanlan's, where she held a reception for ladies, after which she was escorted to the Lindell hotel. The president visited the merchants' ex-change, which was packed with men. Here he was uproariously received, and made a brief speech. Then he went to the Lindell hotel and rested for an hour. ended at 6, Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland standing under a magnificently decorated chandelier in one of the Lindell hotel parlors. ple streamed by for more than three hours without cessation, and it is not saying too much that not a tenth of the people who desired it got a chance to see the honored

At 7:30 the party were driven to the exposition building where the first thing that greeted their view was a full length portrait of Mrs. Cleveland in front of the platform. A short stay was made here, and then back to the hotel. The Hendricks club and Leiderkranz then serenaded the president and he made another short address, and then the procession began. Fully 30,000 men were in line and the heavens were bright with all sorts of fireworks for hours. At midnight Mrs. Cleveland retired, but the president said he would see it through, and for an hour more the people trooped by. It was a great day for St. Louis. The streets were packed in the vicinity of any place a view of the president and wife was to be had, and it was well along in the "wee sma' hours ayant the twa," ere St. Louis went to bed to refresh itself for Tuesday's festivities.

GOOD RESULTS IN EVERY CASE.

The following is an advertisement of an honest article, and the readers are informed at once, that they may not be misled (or hood-winked) into

Many, many, many people suffer continually from the effects of Malaria., which, in general, means Intermittent fever, chills and fever, billiousness, dyspepsia, liver complaint, jaundice, piles, constipation, dizziness, headache, sick headache, impure blood and improper circulation, cold extremities, rheumatism, neuralgia, indigestion, heartburn, languor, pain in the limbs, back ache. great back ache, numbness, low spirits, melancholy, &c., &c.

If a medicine would cure, or even relieve the above complaints, it would certainly be a blessing to every man, woman and child under the sun, to have it and to use it. There is a medicine that will do this; that will not only relieve them, but will cure them-and do it well. This may be a strong statement for the reader to believe, but I can assure you on my own word, and the word of more than thirty thousand people, who have written me voluntary letters of recommendation. that it can be done,—and is being done day by day, by those who use the remeday. The medicine is pleasant, safe to take, entirely vegetable (no mercury) and always gives satisfaction; is very reasonable in price, and is the greatest antidote (cure for) malaria ever known. The medicine is Moore's Pilules-don't forget; Moore's Pilules; -and is for sale generally in drug stores. The proprietor of this paper knows me and recommends my Pilules.

THE CENTURY

FOR 1886-87.

The Century is an illustrated monthly magazine, having a regular circulation of about two hundred thousand copies, often reaching and sometimes exceeding two hundred and twenty-five thousand. Chief among its many attractions for the coming year is a serial which has been in active preparation for sixteen years. It is a history of our own country in its most critical time, as set forth in

THE LIFE OF LINCOLN.

By his confidential Secretaries, John G. Nicolay, and Col. John Hay, and Col. John Hay.

This great work, begun with the sanction of President Lincoln, and continued under the authority of his son, the Hon. Robert T. Lincoln is the only full and autaoritative record of the life of Abraham Lincoln. Its authors were friends of Lincoln before his Presidency; they were most intimately associated with him as private secretaries throughout his torm of office, and to them were transferred upon Lincoln's death, all his private papers. Here will be 1 sld the inside history of the civil war and of President Lincoln's administration,—important details of which have hitherto remained unrevealed, that they might first appear in this authentic history. By reason of the publication of this work.

THE WAR SERIES

which has been followed with unflagging interest by a great audience, will occupy less space during the coming year. Gettysburg will be described by Gen. Hunt (Chief of the Union Artillery), Gen. Longstreet, Gen. E. M. Law, and others: Chickamauga, by Gen. D. H. Hill. Sherman's March to the Sea. by Generals Howard and Slocum. Generals Q. A. Gillmore, Wm. F. Smith. John Gibbon, Herace Porter, and John S. Mosby will describe special battles and incidents. Stories of naval engagements, prison life, etc., etc., will app@ar.

GULLIBILITY.

The wild phantoms and shricking cries of a worthless humbug can make money by imposing upon the credulity and ignorance of an honest public, and the supply of this species of work seems more than an adequate demand. The enunciation of facts—facts that have stood crucial tests—facts proven by brain force and tangible evidence, should satisfy all laudible enterprises; but the execrable practice of teaching false ideas and docrunes for self-aggrandizemen is truly reprehensible and should be scorned by all classes.

When one house tells you that Iodine of Potash is a poison simply because their opponents use it, and because they are pandering to your ignorance, as they suppose, you should look upon all such as arrant frands and their remedies as unworthy of public confidence, and if those who make such assertions do not know better, they are a set of unenviable ignoramuses.

Doctors and Hot Springs.

Hot Springs failed entirely to cure me of several terrible, iddolent running ulcers on my legs with which I have been troubled for many years. Several doctors also attempted to cure me but failed. I have used only a few bottles of B.B. (made at Atlanta, Ga...) and the effect has been truly magical, as they have all healed and I am cured. It is worth all medicanes made for purifying the blood. This wonderfully quich cure has been effected after everything else has failed Your medicine is a dairy, and has done the business for me. I have lived here twenty-five years. My general health is also improving, appetite and digestion good. I sleep soundly, and never felt better. Doctors told me that I could not be cured, but B. B. B. has cured me.

It is decidedly the quickest, best and cheapest blood purifier I ever used. It is ahead of all others. As to my case and its cure I refer to every merchant or professional man of Pine Bluff.

Senator Stanford's $25,000 Barn - His Horse Farm at Palo Alta and His Rules of Horse Training-Representative Scott's Horse Farm.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 .- I walked past the largest private stables in Washington today. They are those of Senator Stanford, of California. The ground allotted to them is sixty feet front by more than 100 feet deep, and the stables will accommodate about a dozen horses and a cow. They are now nearly completed, and they look more like a chapel than stables. The building is of two stories. It is made of select brick, and the ground upon which it stands is worth at least $1 a square foot. It has already cost, all told, $25,000, and will foot up $1,000 more before it is completed. Senator Stanford told me before he left for California that in building these stables he aimed at the comfort of his horses rather than extravagance, and that the reports sent out about their gorgeousness were without foundation.

I went into them myself today. They are entered by double doors, and the covered court where the hitching up is to be done is so big that a four horse omnibus could turn around in it without touching the walls. Its floor is of concrete, in small blocks, and its ceiling, girded by iron rafters, is made of Georgia pine, beautifully oiled and varnished. It is well lighted, and at one corner there is a great elevator, as big as the floor of a fair sized bedroom, which is used for raising and lowering the carriages to the second story. Directly in front of this court stands the door leading on into the stables proper. These are separated from the hitching court by two rooms, one of which is a wash room for harness. This has a stationary wash tub, with hot and cold water, and it has all the conveniences for the hanging up of harness to dry. Upon the opposite side there is a harness room, or what might better be called a harness wardrobe. It is as large as a hall bed room, is lined with glass cases made of some white wood, and along the backs of each case are a number of iron saddles made for the hanging up of harness, Below are drawers in which the robes may be kept and there are a number of poles stretched across the top for the hanging of saddles and harness

The accommodations for the horses are perfect. The stables are arranged so that not a draught of air can strike a heated borse, and so that the light comes from above and cannot shine in their eyes, and the walls of the stables, which are double, are as warm as modern architecture can make them, There are three large box stalls, the lower part of each of which is made of white wood, with an iron railing running around the top. The drainage and sewerage of this barn is as perfect as that of a sanitary resort, and the floor of each of these box stalls slopes slightly from the edges of the square to the center. One of the stalls is more elegantly finished than the others, and this is intended for sick horses. Each stall has a feed trough of iron at the corner, and the halter strap is so arranged with a weight and a pulley that it cannot possibly become entangled in the horse's legs.

The feeding arrangements are up stairs, and the feed is dropped down through chutes by means of slides, so that any given amount Frey's Vermifuge can be accurately measured. There is a little cow stall at the back for one of the Jerseys, and there are four or five other stalls in addition to the box ones. Each stall has a place Unless you want them to get rid of for an iron label over it, on which is to be painted the name of the horse occupying it.

The second floor of these stables is reached by a winding staircase, and here are sitting rooms fitted up with a corner fireplace and a hard wood mantel. This room is the reception room of the stables, and it will be well lighted and comfortably furnished. There are also the bed rooms of the coachman and footman. and Stanford will have telephonic communication with these stables. It will be here that the servants who have charge of the horses will live. The court room on the second floor is only reached, as far as vehicles are concerned, by the elevator. It is roughly finished, and the rafters look down upon the hard wood floor and the half dozen carriages resting upon it.

STANFORD'S STABLES

Senator Stanford has a fine set of turnouts. One of his landaus must weigh over a ton, and it cost $4,000. It is finished within in the finest of satin, and as you sit upon it you sink into a bed of down. Notwithstanding its weight it swings so lightly on its springs that one can sway it to and fro by touching it with his little finger. It is the largest landau in Washington, and when it is drawn by the senator's two big black horses it forms a most striking turn out. In addition to this he has a Victoria with "C" springs, a landaulet, a buggy, a big two-horse sleigh and a number of other carriages, which taken together will make his outfit worth half the amount of the president's salary for a year.

Senator Stanford's Pale Alto (Cal.) farm of 6,000 ocres is run as carefully as a great factory. Senator Stanford took up the keeping of fine borses as a recreation, but he has now turned it into a business, and his sales amount to more than $100,000 a year. His friend tells me that be does not suppose he would sell a colt for less than $500, and in selling his horses be never warrants their speed. He guarantees only the breeding and that the horse has trotted a quarter of a mile in such a time. In 1886 be sold over $300,000 worth of horses, and at one auction sale last year in New York he got $87,000 in cash for one shipment and brought trot in 2:30. Secretary Fairchild has a big the money back to Washington in his riding horse, and he rides at a good rate over trousers pocket. He lately sold one horse to

Lorillard for $6,000, another to Miller & Sibley for $12,000 and a third to Stockbridge, the new senator from Michigan, for $10,000. The horse which Stockbridge bought was a young 3-year-old stallion named Sphinx, Senator Stanford did not know that Stockbridge was to be the purchaser, and it was bought through a third party. One of Stanford's horses, named Midnight, he would not sell for $50,000, and he has been offered $15,000 for it and would not take it. The horse has no record, and this offer is considered very remarkable. He has lost some-thing by accidents to his horses, and Fred Crocker was estimated to be worth $20,000, and was winning all the races in California, when he sprained his hip and became practically worthless.

Next to Stanford, Representative Scott, of Erie, Pa., is perhaps the most noted horse owner in congress. He has a stock farm at Cape Charles in which there are twenty-seven boxes for horses and a walking ring an eighth of a mile long under cover, where the horses can walk and trot when the weather is bad. Scott's regular track is a mile long and fortyfive feet wide, with the turn raised about two feet. Here Scott is breeding some very fine colts, and he had this spring twenty-one horses in training. Among these are some of the most noted horses of the country.

Scott drives a team here at Washington which is valued at $2,500, and it is said that his coachman is paid $100 a month and found.

THE PRESIDENT'S STABLES.

The president's stables are back of the White House, and his seal browns, which have been so much spoken of in the newspapers, are a very decent pair of easy going horses. The coachman is the most stylish thing about the turnout, and the president's favorite carriage is a Victoria. The coachman is Albert Hawkins, a tall, stiff, colored man, whose skin is as black as the buggy be drives, and whose back is as stiff as a carriage tongue. He dresses in a livery of a soft drab, such as you see in buckskin gloves, and this is ornamented with big silver but-tons. As he holds his whip in his right hand and drives Mrs. Cleveland and the president through the streets of Washington, he forms one of the distinguished looking figures of the capital. The president's harness is made of black rubber and trimmed with silver, and its only ornament is a simple "G. C." in mouogram on the rosette of the bridle. His two turnouts, the Victoria and the landau, have cost altogether less than $2,000, and I think be paid only $1,000 for the seal browns. The White House stables are by no means wonderful either in structure or in contents. The building is a brick, of one story, and an attic made in the form of the head of a "T." Two wings run at right angles with the main building, one at each end, and the space between these makes a sort of courtyard, in which the hitching up and unhitching is done. In these wings are kept the carriages, and many a man in any city of the United States has just as good turnouts as those of the president. The front part of the stable middle hall is allotted to the horses, and the stalls are divided by fancy iron lattice work painted in red and brown. There is a notice over the entrance stating that PRESIDENT'S COACHMAN. strangers are not admitted, but the daintiest lady could walk through these stables without soiling her clothes, and everything is kept in Telephone Bell has a stable which is built upon ground worth at least $2 a square foot, and his pressed brick barn would make a good enough house for a congressman to live in. Don Cameron is a great horse lover, and he keeps a number of fine riding and driving horses here at Washington. He and Gen. Sheridan often ride out in the country together.

Secretary Endicott bought Senator Pendleton's team when he rented his house of him. I never saw Attorney General Garland driving, and Lamar rode on horseback during the first days of his administration.

The Russian diplomats drive good horses, and I see one Russian going about the city in a rig which looks as though it might have stepped out of a painting of a Siberian scene. It has a single horse of immense size driven by a Russian who will weigh at least 300 pounds. The horse has a great bow over his back and the carriage is large enough for only one person, and the driver sits in front of the occupant.

Several of Gen. Grant's horses are in the possession of Gen. Beale, who is one of the most noted horsemen of Washington. He bas a stock farm near here, and he and Grant used to drive out to this whenever the general visited the city.

A great many of the senators drive good horses. Warner Miller had a couple of Hambletonians who could trot in three minutes, and Senator Spooner drives a pair of bays who want to pass everything on the road. The horses of Senators Allison and Shefman make no pretensions as to speed. They are good looking, moderate going trotters, and Senator Evarts drives a couple of very good horses of Kentucky stock.

Some of the public men here rent their horses and livery to match. You can get a horse and coupe, with driver, to serve during the season at $150 a month, and the carriage will be subject to your call. It is said that some of the fine turnouts of the legations are hired at the livery stables, and one minister is said to pay $175 a month for an equipage which passes as his own

Secretary Whitney is the finest judge of horseflesh in the cabinet. He drives a pair of clean limbed big roans, with short tails. He has a number of saddle horses and a big bay buggy horse, which is said to be able to the country roads near Washington. Secretary Bayard drives a large coach before

TELEPHONE BELL'S STABLES. banged tailed bays, and the secretary has also a fine saddle horse, though he has not used this at paper chasing. John R. McLean drives two horses which cost him $1,000 apiece, and his coachman is a colored man in a very stylish livery. Bancroft has a Kentucky saddle horse, and in addition to this a pair of black horses for his carriage.

Take the horses of Washington and they are on the average as good as those of any city of the United States. The best product of all parts of the country comes here, and good horses can be gotten as cheaply at the capital as in any market of the country.

BALL PLAYERS PROPOSE TO STICK BY THE BROTHERHOCD.

A Short History of W. Byrd Page, the Jumper-Sketch and Picture of Boston's New Baseball Stand-The Series Between St. Louis and Detroit.

[Special Correspondence.] Boston, Oct. 3.-Great surprise has been manifested at the action of the National league in refusing to recognize the league Brotherhood, and it looks as if there was going to be war. There are two sides to this question, of course, and the league has its side as well as the brotherhood. As a matter of fact, it takes an iron hand to run a lot of baseball players. When, at the Brooklyn athletic games, Mr. Page broke the American record with a jump of 6 feet 2 inches, his club decided to send him to England. He was unfortunate enough to sprain his ankle previous to his departure, and when he arrived in England he was obliged to undergo a course of treatment.

The first time he did any practicing at the bar in England was at the Grassmere sports, when he appeared on the turf with his ankle still in bandage. Then he crossed over to Ireland, tied the great Irish jumper, Kelly, at 6 feet 1½ inches, and claimed the championship of Ireland, as Kelly would not jump off.

Then he broke the previous best records of P. Davin, at Carrick-on-Suir, Ireland, who jumped 6 feet 2½ inches on July 5, 1880, by clearing 6 feet 3½ inches on July 5, 1880, by clearing 6 feet 3½ inches at a bound. When Page returned from England he raised the American high running jump record tully half an inch, and only failed to smash his own tremendous performance of 6 feet 3½ inches by the merest accident. He made three trials, and twice cleared the bar fairly, but in coming down dislodged it with his hand or elbow.

Raise Better Horses.

Fashion has brought about many changes in horse breeding among American farmers, and no race has set the new style more forcibly or to larger purpose than the American trotting horse. The American trotter is a horse capable of every service; there is, in almost literal truth, no limit to the speed in which he can trot one mile, and his capacity of endurance, whereof such contests are most exacting proof, is accepted as a fact in the minds of all observant men, while his patient temper, and good size, combined with the extraordinary muscularity with which true systems of breeding have endowed him, render him an exceed ingly valuable onimal for any work of labor and routine.

The farmer who is looking forward to improvement in his stock, must be careful in making selection of his breeding animals, and, herein, it is of the utmost importance that the sire chosen be an available, valuable, and in every respect, a choice animal, possessing individually and ancestrally the best qualities which the offspring is desired to possess .-American Agriculturist for October.

Arrangement of Bay Windows for Plants.

As a general thing bay windows are not arranged in such a manner as to accommodate plants very conveniently. We usually find them fitted out with circular stands or tables. On these a few plants only can be kept, and the appearance from the room is never as good as it might be, and a bay window ought always to be arranged with reference to its appearance from within rather than without. Run two shelves around the window; on these plants can be arranged very neatly, using the lower growers on the low shelf, where they will hide the pots of those on the shelf above. A much better He came into effect can be obtained in arranging plants in this way, than is possible when they are all on a level. In the center of the window a stand may be made a record of 5 grounds of the placed to hold the largest plant, where it will appear to the best advantage. Pots of ivy may be placed in the corners, and the vines trained time a member of up the casings, and around the ceilthe University of ing. The floor should be covered with oil cloth, or well painted, and red himself to the the shelves and all the woodwork ought also to be given several coats of paint, that they may not be affectedby the moisture which frequent syringing will leave behind. It is a good plan to have holes through the floor to allow surplus water to run off. It is best to have these shelves made like stairs, or, in other words, closed, so that there is no opening from the front. This will make the recess easier to keep clean, as there will be no sweeping under the shelves to do. Bay windows, in which plants are kept, should always be shut off from the room by glazed doors. In this way the moisture can be regulated to a nicety, all dust arising from sweeping kept out, and the plant will be much healthier than when grown in a window without doors .- American Agriculturist for

Our constitution is a great bulwark, and our laws are great institutions greatly to be feared. There is room for apprehension, however, as to their permanency and stability when one regards with careful thought the leniency and apparent timidity with which great crimes and criminals are handled. It would seem that the greater the crime against their majesty the less vigorous and determined is the prosecu tion, and although, as a rule, justice triumphs in the end, it comes along tardily and without the air of swift and speedy vengeance which invests legal punishment with its greatest terror. No better instances in proof of this very patent fact may be cited than the two great capital crimes of recent years—the murder of President Garfield, and Anarchist case of Chicago. Had Guiteau been guilty of burning a barn, or had the Chicago clowd of murderers been charged with stealing hogs, a brief trial the just sentence of imprisonment But when, instead, the crime transcends in enormity anything in the annals of the law, and the certainty of guilt is unquestionably fixed, the country must be treated to twelve months of sickening sentimentalism and dangerous delay before the axe of the executioner falls and Justice gets its due. Guiteau shot the President, was seen by many persons to do it, did not deny the crime, and yet it took a year to get a ver dict and sentence in accordance with these facts. The Anarchists fired their mine in the Haymarket one year ago last May and there is yet uncertainty as to their fate. While offences of such magnitude, so well contested in the courts, may bring out nice and before undiscovered points of technical practice, and require time in their exact and decisive adjustment, there is an air of uncertainty and inactivity about the delays that tends to detract from the wholesome fear the lawless have for that justice may be defeated, and prompts criminals to new and fresher efforts to escape the penalty of their crimes. There is nothing more repugnant to our civilization than the horrors of lynch law, but there is one good effect might be transplanted to

Donnelly-Bacon-Shakespeare.

Mr. Ignatius Donnelly is amusing himself and preparing amusement for others by writing a book intended to show that Bacon wrote Shakespeare's plays and that he imbedded a record of his authorsnip in the play of Henry the Fourth, through the medium of a cipher. When it is considered that the construction of all language is such as to render possible the evolution of any imaginable kind of cipner from any book extant almost, the gravity and importance of Mr. Donnelly's discovery may be fairly appreciated. Any ingenious person could go to work upon "Robinson Crusoe" or "Gulliver's Travels" and deduce from their pages abundance of evidence, in cipher form, to the effect that neither Defoe nor Swift had anything to do do with the authorship. There is, in short, practically unlimited play for horrors of lynch law, but there is one fantasy in such a field, and nobody quality in its wild terror that with need be surprised if Mr. Donnelly's "finds" support his theory, inasmuch as the theory in this case is the fath er of the alleged cipher. What really is curious about the matter is the sure and speedy execution. Let our apparent seriousness with which this courts awake to the fact that there misguided gentleman attempts to is a crying need of more promptness, establish parallels between the Shakespeare of the Plays and the dallying with crime in high places. Bacon of the Works. Perhaps dis-cussion of this is idle, since where there is so evident an absence of critical perception correction would be hopeless. None the less is the position of Mr. Donnelly perilously near the comical.

As a matter of fact, no two styles are less alike than those of Bacon and Shakespeare. The man who ings, that Bacon possessed the poetic temperament deserves to be accorded the same deference as would follow the opinions of a deaf-mute on below to a pinky terre cotta. About classical music. Bacon was over weighted by his learning, and wrote with pedantic artificiality and stiff ness. Nothing is more characteristic of Shakespeare than the majestic naturalness and simple ease with which he carries the broadest dis cusion of the deepest subjects. The two writers afford strong contrasts, excerpting words, phrases, lines or passages, and uniting them into a hocus pocus semblance of likeness. The Baconians have never had any thing more solid to go upon than a congenital incapacity for criticism, comparison, analysis and judgment. The President's Visit Causes Some Unpleas antness Among Local Democrats. Indianapolis Journal (Monday).

No one questions the almost pain ful lack of heartiness in the reception of President Cleveland on Saturday. So far as Republicans were concerned they could scarcely be expected to make much noise over a hippodrome, the illcorcealed purpose of which was to boom a man as a political candidate for a political office. It has been announced by speaker Carlisle that the President's trip meant "conquest," and the local Democrat managers had managed to throw around the visit as much of a partisan flavor as was possible. The Republicans received the President respectfully, and with more consideration for a real, non-partisan welcome to the chief magistrate than was shown by Democrats. But the reception in Indianapolis says: It is Democrats themselves had no heart evident that the press gang are to in it. Coming from Pennsylvania and the East into the atmosphere of Indiana, Mr. Cleveland must have been convinced that there was much truth in all that had been said by Scott Ray and his kind, about the feeling of Indiana Democrats toward him and his administration. In-diana Democrats do not like Mr. Cleveland, and they could not prevent letting him know it on were excluded. In 1872 Horace Saturday by the cold and chilling greeting they gave him on his first visit to the capital of their State. Whatever there was of apparent enthusiasm was perfunctory, worked up, put on for the occasion. * * * Publicly, leading Democrats are having little to say as to what they think about the President's reception, but they have been doing a great deal of talking among themselves. Their disappointment over the failure of the Democrats of the State to turn out and give him a grand ovation, cannot be suppressed. They looked upon the visit solely from a political point of view, and expected to see a Democratic boom brought about by the Democrats from all parts of the State flocking to the capital and offering homage to the chief magistrate and Democratic candidate for re-election. The visit, they hoped, would not only rebound to the inter est of national politics, but would prove beneficial to the party, through out the State and locally. Whether the President had any such motive in view or not, the leaders of the local Democracy did, and hence this great disappointment at the dismal failure of the demonstration. The frank members of the party admit that so far as any enthusiasm was concerned the affair was a disappointment, to say the least.

The important announcement is made that the Indiana State Board of Health has decided to require owners and operators of railroads to in or through the State. The Board holds that the smoke from the en gines aggravates throat and pulmonary troubles, besides being uncomfortable and objectionable to every body, whether predisposed to these diseases or not. At first glance the proposition of the Board to prescribe such a regulation does not appear to be compatible with the generally accepted understanding of the duties of their office, but by investigating the law creating the Board it will be found that it may be construed so as to give the health officers almost unlimited power, and no other de-partment of the civil government of the State is so well equipped for the speedy and peremptory enforcement of its orders.—Lafayette Courier.

LIBERALS AT DINNER.

THEY RIDICULE THE FESTIVITIES OF THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

Free Judgment Passed on Princes, Potentates and Diplomats of High and Low Degree-Parsimony of Her Gracious Majesty Victoria-Her First Love.

Paris, Sept. 14.—Imagine a spacious, old fashioned mansion in the north of England, with a large hall running from door to door, serving the double purpose of an entrance and dining room, decorated with the heads and branching horns of many a hapless deer, with flags, armor, pikes, guns and bows, and huge skins of lions, leopards and tigers on the floor, and a large round table in the center, where many a good dinner had been served to bold thinkers in days gone by. Imagine all this, and you will have the surroundings of a charming dinner party that I am about to describe—not the menu, the succession of courses, the china, the silver, but the main points of the conversation.

On this occasion there were assembled there a county squire, a retired general, a naval officer, a clergyman, a Socialist, an artist, a professor of political economy and two American ladies. The conversation, which lasted until midnight, was a wholesale criticism of royalty, its greed and selfishness, as illustrated in the recent festivities.

The rejoicings of the queen and her flunkies that in all the upheavals on the continent she has stuck to her throne for fifty years, is still a theme of constant merriment with the press and the people. The gist of the talk on this occasion will give you an idea of how rapidly the respect for the royal family is "Now that the jubilee junketing is over," said our host, "the last corner stone of future institutions laid for this year, the dazzling spectacular processions ended; now that the music has ceased and the lights are out, hysteria is giving way to common sense, and it is evident that a time of practical reflection is setting in. Loyalty to monarchical ideas was at high water level just before the recent celebration. In 1848 republican tendencies in England reached flood tide, but the ebb has been steadily going on ever since. And now the time for the return wave has come, and the change of feeling will be all the more rapid, because of the relapse that always follows abnormal enthusiasm. Hard headed and close fisted John Bull is beginning to ask what all the fuss, which he must pay for, has been about. The overburdened taxpayers realize now that the uproar has been of no benefit to them. But the great enthusiasm we have witnessed was not the result of loyalty, but of the fact that in England we have no regular national fete day." Addressing the American lady on his right be said: "We have nothing recurring every year like your Decoration day, your Fourth of July, Thanksgiving and Washington's birthday. All we have is a bank holiday, occurring on four Mondays chosen at convenient intervals during the year, to give the Bank of England clerks a needed rest from casting up columns of figures. Think of a nation without a single day set apart to celebrate any great patriotic event, and then you can judge of the cause of the enthusiasn roused by the recent fetes."

Yes," said the hostess, laughing, "what sentiment can these bank holidays suggest? Nothing but work and cold dinners,

"I have lived in England," said one of the American ladies, "five years, and until this summer have never seen any illuminations, decorations or pyrotechnics, and though I am a patriotic citizen of the United States and a red Republican, and have no respect for royalty, yet I sallied forth to see the sky-rockets, and my spirit of liberty rose with them to the zenith. I had not seen a Roman candle for years, and how could I help being enthusiastic

"But most of the magnificent spectacles," said the gentleman of socialistic tendencies, "furnished at government expense were all arranged for the benefit of the upper classes. The rights of the people have been signally outraged. Long before coronation day the lovers of Westminster abbey found its doors closed upon them and beard ominous sounds of hammer and plane coming from the interior. It is said the building is permanently injured. The Pall Mall in a recent issue said: 'Those who choose to visit Westminster abbey now that it is once more open for worship, after a long period of uselessness, will find melancholy traces of the stupendous and costly farce recently enacted there, brave old walls have suffered considerable damage, and the place does not seem like itself-to some of us it never will again. We hope the spoilers and blasphemers are satisfied with their work.'

"Outside the scaffolding and buildings were raised to accommodate lords, ladies and the queen's royal visitors, while the representatives of the people took a low rank, and watched the spectacle from less conspicuous coigns of vantage. The people who could not afford to pay £5 or £10 for a window or a seat on some speculator's stand stood on the sidewalks and gutters, elbowing one another, jestled by police on the one side and soldiers on the other; so densely packed that some fainted, some were seriously hurt: even bones were broken. And lo! when the royal lady appeared, the object of intense curiosity to this hapless crowd, she was in a closed carriage, with the proverbial black bonnet and veil. There was grumbling and questioning as to where the crown and robes The bone and sinew of London came up out of its workshops to see their queen, not the widow of the prince consort. The robes and other state paraphernalia were donned at the abbey for the benefit of the nobility, who could appreciate elegance. 'The great unwashed,' it was said, 'could not tell the difference between a black bonnet and a crown."

"Compare this picture," said the artist, "with that charming scene in the stage life of Fanny Kemble, England's tragedy queen. Seeing some poor women peeping in through the window of her dressing room at the thea-tre, she beckoned them to enter, showed them her gowns and jewels, gave them a seat where they could see the play, and when all was ended lade them good night with words of tenderness and sympathy."

"But there was one touch of nature," said the hostess, "in the Westminster farce that would make the workingwomen feel akin to their sovereign, were the fact generally known. After the solemn praying and chanting and offering of thanksgiving to God for his mercies were all ended the queen retired, and her first command was 'a pint bottle of stout!' One other human episode reached the people outside. Their little red, short, puffy Prince of Wales, in blazing scarlet uniform, was redder still with rage at being placed in too close proximity with his tall, majestic brother in-law, the Crown Prince of Germany, looking like a viking in his superb white cuirassler uniform, with resplendent steel belmet and floating white plume."

"The review of the army at Aldershot," said the retired general, "was intended to be and was a grand spectacular occasion, but there was o thought of making it a gala day for the soldiers. No message came from the queen to give them a sumptuous entertain-ment at her expense. No, no. It was a torrid day for England, and the men came out of the dust of the maneuvers as black as chimney sweeps, and for their trouble they were dined as usual on canned beef and vegetables. "The naval review was a consummate failure and attended with serious catastrophes. Of late years there has been much doubt as to the efficiency of the navy, so there was a widespread desire to see the vessels at close range. Newspaper editors immediately busied themselves in fanning the national pride, though obliged ever and anon to make most disquieting revelations. I see where you Americans get your easy going ways. It is an Anglo-Saxon peculiarity. The British taxpayer is rather inclined to chuckle over the recent embarrassments of the admiralty, though fully compre-hending the serious meaning of the facts that swords and bayonets bend up like tin when used, and that naval maneuvers, through the bursting of guns, have been as disastrous to life and limb as war with a foreign foe. Yet it was a general surprise that the Curlew, a new, swift ship, immediately broke down and had to go into dock for a thorough overhauling; that the Collingwood had to steam into port with one set of engines, the stuffing boxes of the others having collapsed; that the Ajax and Devastation had a collision in broad daylight and both nearly foundered; that the Infl xible's high pressure piston shank fell to leaking so that she could not keep up her speed at the decisive moment; that the Colossus, one of the newest ships, showed she could not stand the firing of her heavy guns; that three of the torpedo boats came to grief and had to retire; in short, that three-sevenths of the fleet, sailing slowly about in 'queen's weather,' on calm seas, with only imaginary foes, were at the end of one week hors de combat." This graphic summing up of the army and navy by the general was received with hearty

"And yet," said our hostess, "The Standard tells us that 'this is the best of all possible fleets for the defense of the best of all possible islands.' Well, we Anglo-Saxons are slipshod, although we seem to get on in the world."

"Yes," said the retired naval officer, "the review was not only a signal failure, but it illustrates the utter indifference of royalty to the comfort and safety of the people. The queen was two hours late in starting, so the sailors who manned the yards were kept all that time, like so many cormorants, up in the rigging in the blazing sun. When her royal highness did appear she was greeted by the firing of a royal salute from all the vessels. The booming was, however, the death knell of some of her subjects, who by an unhappy accident were blown into eternity. Several others now lie at Melville hospital. Of these four will be permanently blind. One has his hand blown off and the side of his body badly mutilated. Some are terribly disfigured, others have had legs and arms amountated. But her majesty was honored, and what avails the lives of a few privates in the mavy? Suppose a dozen Battenbergs had been thus suddenly dispatched to heaven, would the rejoicings have proceeded just the same? The full extent of that accident has not as yet been half told. If the people knew onetenth of what is going on behind the scenes the nation would be in a ferment of indigna-

"It is a pertinent question," said the professor, "and one that is being asked by practical people just now, what Victoria Regina has done towards our national development that should entitle her to the loyalty of the democracy. During the last tifty years Great Britain has increased in wealth, in commercial power; she has developed a system of national education; has added luster to all developments of literature, enriched science with great discoveries, and with its increased population has built up prosperous colonies beyond the seas. In achieving all this what part has loyalty played? Well, it cannot be denied that her majesty and her children have contributed their full share to the population, though unfortunately only to the pauper classes, nor is it open to dispute that The Queen's Journal has been an immortal contribution to our literature, and it is said a novel from her fertile pen is now in preparation. The royal lady can also claim that she has signed acts of parliament for fifty long years; that she has given state dinners and eaten them too."

"She has stood up," added our hostess, "till her back ached, receiving representatives of foreign governments, and even their ladles, when the latter did not insuit her by appearing in high necked dresses. She has also many a time suffered with vertigo from lay ing corner stones, and has opened building after building, which thankless task has only been made endurable by receiving a hand-some commemoration gift. Surely here is reason enough why her subjects should love

"Let us see," rejoined a member of parliament, "what reasons there are why she should love her people. First she gets from them over $2,000,000 a year, and about $700,000 to keep her palaces in order. Beside the queen has an immense private fortune. She is a fabulously rich woman, no one knows how rich, for she pays no income tax. And now consider the charges for the royal nursery The princess royal gets in your American can ency $40,000; the Prince of Wales $200,000 and $300,000 more from the duchy of Cornwall. $7,000 for the colonelcy of the Tenth Hussars; the Princess of Wales gets $50,000; the Duke of Edinburgh, $125,000; the Princess Helena, $30,000; Princess Louise, $30,000; the Duchess of Teck, $25,000; the Duke of Connaught, $125,000; the Duchess of Albany, $30,000, and then a long line of the queen's relatives are pensioned. In view of this bountiful provision there is no reason why the reigning family should not feel jubilant."

"But it would have been more patriotic," said the clergyman, "if there had been some-thing done in the interest of the people, Four hundred pounds, given mostly in printy contributions by working women as an offering to the queen, was expected to come back to the ration in the form of some great char-ity. But nothing is heard of the money. though days are growing into weeks, weeks into months. The whole history of this 'woman's offering' is revolting in its syco-phancy. It was started by ladies to court advancement, and who took this means of urrying favor.'

'Yes," said the general, "wives of certain officers at Aldershot-I could name them if I hose-went from door to door in the barracks and put official pressure on the wives of the soldiers to make them contribute. It was well known to these official females that the soldiers are shamefully underpuid, on the supposition that if they marry their wives will add to their income. You know in Germany if a woman marries an officer she must first prove that she has a sufficient income to support berself and family. The idea is well understood here, though not so clearly defined. Autograph letters from the Prince of Wales were actually sent to mili-tary and naval officers requesting contributions for his pet Imperial institute, which rests on a very questionable foundation."

"There is a ludicrous confusing of sentiment with hard headed practicality," said the American lady, "that makes the whole melodrama quite laughable. How much each one was to give in the various 'free will' offerings was carefully specified; for instance, the demand on army officers for three-fourchs of a day's pay. And then it seems the recipient of the 'spontaneous gift' was not to forget in the first moments' burst of gratitude that the money was to come back in charity."

"The honor of the nation," said our host, "has been quite as badly ignored as the interests of the people. It is a vital point with Great Britain to keep on good terms with the European powers, yet the three most important ambassadors at the court of St. James-De Staat, Waddington and Kalnoky-received such shabby treatment that they left the palace in high dudgeon. Surely it was to the credit of the nation that the princes from the great dependency of India should be as well received as petty European sovereigns, but there was such a want of civility that Maharajah Holkar indignantly left Lon don. His precipitate retreat was mainly caused by the slight offered him and his countrymen at the volunteer review. The Indian princes were told to leave their carriages outside Buckingham palace. As they picked their way in their magnificent robes across the court yard little German princelings in grand turnouts drove by them right up to the pavilion. Nor did this end the slights. Next came the laying of the corner stone of the Imperial institute. It was supposed this building was to be erected for the special benefit of the colonies and India. But on the dais reserved for royalties not an Indian prince appeared. They were not even escorted to front seat, but left with the general crowd. Later they were accorded the privilege of paying their own way to Portsmouth and back. Nor did they find themselves in a royal yacht at the naval review, but on the oldest and dirtiest of the troopships at the tail end of the procession. Not only were representatives of India and the colonies, arliamentary representatives of Great Britain and Ireland, preceded by the yacht bearing the queen, not only by that of the Prince of Wales and by three others carrying their betters, but in trnth by the vessel of the suite of the royal household. Verily the house of Hanover seems to be wholly oblivious to court etiquette, to all the privi-leges of rank except what applies to them-

"The avarice of the queen," said the artist, is one of the most lamentable of her characteristics. She has been in the habit of inviting distinguished actors to Windsor to give private entertainments for herself and royal guests, but always remunerating them most inadequately for their services, and there was much dissatisfaction among some that the profession had wasted any money on her jubilee. I was in a certain place the other day and found myself one of a crowd largely nposed of actors, among whom there was much indignant talk about 'waste of money.' The 'waste' referred to the cost of the profession's address to the queen. The bundreds spent upon it, they declared, had been thrown away, as her majesty had treated it with indifference. On one occasion the queen invited the comic actor, Mr. Wyndham, to give some recitations. When he left she actually had the face to give him half a pound. He bowed graciously in receiving it, and on arriving at London be put it into a charity box and had it registered as a donation from himself and the queen. Another evidence of her parsimony is now going the rounds of the British Liberal journals after this fashion:

"'What is mine is my own,' cries her majesty; and she has no intention of letting anything that is absolutely her private prop erty fall into the hands of the nation. She has determined to store the costly gifts received during her jubilee at Balmoral and Oshorne, instead of at Buckingham palace and Windsor, as it is at these latter royal residences that there are collections of precious things which are crown property, and her majesty is fearful that some of her presents, if stored at either of these places, may be confounded at some distant date with what belongs to the nation, and give rise to disputes between herself, her heirs, administrators or assigns and the crown. careful queen! It is a pity the nation has not been equally careful in the past, as there are many priceless possessions of theirs which have got mixed up with her majesty's own treasures, and now the sovereign is much surprised when it is pointed out to her that they do not belong to her personally,"

"Did you ever hear," said the venerable general, "that before her marriage her majesty was hopelessly in love with the captain the Royal guards-a tall, splendid man? Her passion was so well known that the captain was ordered to India and the German Prince Albert promptly imported." With this dainty bit of gossip and some discussion on social ethics the ladies retired. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.

We heard a young girl make the above remark the other day about a lady with whom we are slightly ac quainted It was not true, yet the lady in question actually does look five years older than her husband although she is really several years his junior. how easily rheumatism begins, and how insidiously it grows in the system, until one is startled to find himself its victim in either the acute or chronice form. He then learns the fearful tenacity of its grip and the utter powerlessness of the ordinary remedies to give relief.

Probably to no disease have physicians given more study, and none has more completely baffled their efforts to provide a specific; and until Athlophoros was dis-covered there was no medicine which would surely cure rheumatism, neuralgia and nervous or sick headache. Thousands of testimonials like the following prove beyond question that Athlophoros is the only reliable remedy, and that it will do all that is claimed for it.

Madison, Ind. Some 16 months ago I had inflammatory rheumatism, and after trying domestic and physicians' prescriptions without getting any relief, I was induced to try Athlophoros. After using seven bottles I was restored to good health, and to this day have been clear of the disease, and have been able to work at my trade regularly.

C. W. WYKOFF.

Richmond, Ind. One year ago I was taken down with sciatica, suffering severly, requiring the most powerful and active medicine which partially restored me, but did not cure me. I saw soon after getting out of my bed an advertisement of Athlophoros. Went and bought a bottle of it and from the first two or three doses experienced relief. I took about three-quarters of the contents of the bottle which seems to have cured me entirely, not having the least symptom of sciatica or rheumatism since.

ASSEMBLY OF THE KNIGHTS.

Harmonious Action Looked for-Powderly Arrives-Current Talk.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 4.—Nine-tenths of the delegates to the Knights of Labor assembly had arrived in this city by night Monday, and most of the remainder got in during the night. The credentials committee were hard at work during the day, but most of the contested cases, including those of Schilling and Zeib, of Chicago, and Buchanan, also of Chicago, but who represents Colorado, were still undecided when they adjourned. Nobody expects any split or serious dissensions in the assembly property of the contest of the cont bly now, although there will be, probably, lively debates over the temperance idea, and the Chicago stock yards strike, and other such matters. Neither is there any such general clamor for Powderly's scalp as some of the newsmongers bave been predicting. His most pronounced opponents say that if he has made mistakes, some one else might have made worse ones, and it is the same way with the executive board.
Powderly arrived Monday afternoon and walked the extire distance up Hennepin avenue from the Union station to the hotel with-out being identified by a solitary individual. Once inside the rotunda, however, he was heartily welcomed by hundreds of local and visiting knights, who were awaiting him, and it was nearly an hour before he could get to his room. He had little to say besides referring to the importance of the coming gathering, and his belief that many questions would be settle; during its continuance.

At night he spoke to a mixed audience of 10,000 people, at the rink, upon the topic, "The World as Knighthood would Make It." Although there was a charge for admission, large numbers were unable to even obtain standing room.

grounds where the evolutions of the soldiers were to be performed at the opening ceremonies was covered with people and they stayed there, notwithstanding the efforts of sentinels here and there to clear them of. At last the regulars were called into action and soon had the scattered peo-ple corraled in the

After the speech making the first brigade dress parade was held, and was hardly up to Upton's tacties. Col. Black, himself one of the best tacticians in the United States army, looked vexed, the Scandinavian officers stared as if they were witnessing one of those patented American affairs which have be-come famous in the old country, and Col. drill will bring the dress parade undoubtedly up to a higher standard. The battalion of egulars and the cavalry marched in fine form, mud or so mud, but the national guards looked a little too much at their boots to keep proper alignment in the company fronts. Fortunately the camp s drying fast. The cavalry is by far the best battalion on the grounds well drilled and ably bandled. The musicians succeeded in getting their solid square into all sorts of imaginable mathematical figures. But this was only a first day, anyhow, and the grounds were in berrid condition.

HOLOCAUST IN DETROIT.

A Fire in & Cheap Lodging-House Results in Loss of Life.

DETROIT, Oct. 1 .- Fire broke out at about 3:15 o'cleck Saturday morning in the English kitchen, a cheap lodging-house at 224 Jefferson avenue. When the fire department arrived the upper windows of the four-story building were alive with half-dressed lodgers screaming for help. All except three were rescued in safety. One of the three was burned almost beyond recognition; the second died from suffocation before he was removed from the building, and the third, Charles Peterson, aged 22, single, though rescued alive, is in a condition which renders his recovery extremely doubtful. The dead are Elisha Stroh, of Breckenridge, Mo., and an unknown man, aged about 25 years. The less by the fire is about $5,000.

The Graphic Press Company Fails. Press company, publishers of The Weekly Graphic at 125 Main street, assigned Friday to Henry A. Morrill. Is the Oriental salutation knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. tions, the loss of her mother Soon after her mother's departure she began attending boarding-school; first at River Forest School, next at Miss Rice's academy in Chicago, then she spent two years at Ursuline convent, Chatham, Onterio, and the last two years at De-Pauw University, Greencastle, Ind. of her years, and in the last-named she attained an almost enviable rank. Having an amiable disposition, she drew around her a circle of ad_ mirers who found in her a genial companio and a true friend,

Being deprived of a mother's coansel in her early youth, she was compelled to rely largely upon her own resourses for the directing of her personal conduct, and this brought forth the possibilities of her nature to a degree greatly in advance of her years. Her friendly epistles to her family and associates abound in beauty of thought and construction, which will be held as rare treasures in that memory by which we pos-sess the departed. While she seemed to have had given her a vigorous body, she nevertheless was delicate in constitution, and the tax npon her resources which produced the gratifying results just mentioned, twice brought her near the mystic river and finally placed her upon the bed of death.

During her stay at Greencastle, having previously given her heart to God, she gave her hand to the M. E. church, and thus took her place among the willing workers for the glory of the

Through all of her long and painful sicknes she was patient, cheerful, and hopeful. With such possibilities before her it is no wonder that she clung to life; but when the balances were drawn, and the end drew near she relinquished her hold on the world and looked with loving anxiety for the greeting that awaited her, and which was so near at hand.

In the afternoon of Thursday last her friends saw that the end was near, and with that anxious suspense which attends the waiters by the dying couch they listened for the rustle of the angel's wings as they came to bear her spirit home. Her hands fell helpless by her side, the paralysis of death stole slowly over her body, her tongue refused to fill its mission, her pulse ran weak and weaker still, her breath faint, and just as the clock struck out the hour of midnight, she was gone. She died Sept, 15th, 1887, being 17 years, 9 months and 2 days of age.

Her work on earth is done, yet her sweet life will linger with its blessings through the passing .- REV. A. N. ELDBED in Litchfield (Mich.)

The Pacific Railroads.

New York Independent

The report of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the Government Railroad Commissioner, in regard to the Pacific railroads, presents the facts relating to their financial condition at the end of 1886. From this report it appears that the debt of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., at the close of last December, was $159,499,747, which, with the addition of its capi tal stock, makes an aggregate liabili ty of $220,368,247, and that the assets of the company amount to $257,592,-821. The report also shows the capital stock of the Central Pacific Co., to be $68,000,000, and its funded debt to be $61,697,000, making an aggregate of $129,697,000. The fin ancial condition of the Northern Pacific Company may be seen by the following figures · capital stock, $86, 936,766; total debt, $85,158,484; assets estimated at $173,170,220.

The report contains no recommen dations whatever as to the manner in which the huge debt due to the United States from the Union and Central Pacific companies shall be finally adjusted. This is still an open question, and its solution awaits the future action of Congress. The debt must ultimately be paid; but the precise policy for attaining this result is not yet fixed.

The Neck of the Giraffe.

In spite of its enormous length it only pos-esses the seven vertebræ which are common to nearly all the mammals. In consequence it is nearly as inflexible as a wooden bar of equal length, so that the many pretty pictequal length, so that the many pretty pictures which represent giraffes curving their necks gracefully, after the manner of swans, are ludicrously wrong. "But," said the objectors, "if it had so long and inflexible a neck it could not graze, and being a ruminant animal would die of hunger." It is quite true that it cannot graze. It are problement it that it cannot graze. It can only lower its head near the ground by spreading its forelegs as widely as possible and drawing its hind legs under them, thus presenting a most ludicrous aspect. In its native state it never, as far as I know, even attempts to lower its head to the ground, but in captivity it can be induced to do so by laying on the ground a large lump of sugar, of which it is inordinately fond.

The fact is that it is intended to graze, not on the ground, but on the leaves of trees. The acacia, or mimosa, is its favorite tree, and the Dutch colonists have in consequence called the acacia by the name of "kameeldorn"-i. e., camel thorn, they invariably giving the name of "camel" to the giraffe. This mode of feeding involves another anomalous structure. This is the tongue, on which alous structure. This is the tongue, on which the giraffe is almost as much dependent as is the elephant on its proboscis. It is possessed of wonderful powers of extension and contraction, and can be narrowed until it almost resembles the corresponding organ of the ant eater. The peculiar powers of the tongue can eater. well be seen when the animal takes the sugar from the ground. It does not attempt to seize the sugar with its lips, but protrudes its tongue to its fullest extent, twists the narrowed tip around the sugar and so draws the coveted dainty into its mouth. When it feeds on the trees it picks off leaf after leaf quite daintily, selecting those which are most to its taste,-Good Words.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances.

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious sub-stance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology." "I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Note-The above Diagram illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.
